

French president's daughter is Susan Ford's tour guest

(c) New York Times Washington Valerie-Ann Giscard d'Estaing, 21-year-old daughter of the French president, tours the White House this afternoon with Susan Ford. Later, at a supper dance at the French Embassy, the 17-year-old Miss Ford and 25 or 30 of her friends will be among 150 guests, most of them young people from diplomatic, administration or congressional families.

Neither of the two presidents' daughters will have a date or official escort.

Miss Giscard, making her third American visit, reigns this week as queen of the Azalea Festival in Norfolk, Va., now an annual salute to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which has its naval headquarters there.

Senate Wives Host Luncheon for Betty

Washington (AP) Senate wives paid tribute to First Lady Betty Ford with a luncheon and a performance by two members of the New York City Ballet.

The audience included not only the President's wife and Happy Rockefeller, wife of the vice president, but also visiting former First Lady Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson and Judy Agnew, wife of the former Vice President.

Because of Mrs. Ford's interest in the ballet, dancers Violette Verdy and Edward Villella were invited to perform during the Senate wives group's annual spring luncheon

The luncheon is the only social activity of the organization, which makes articles for the Red Cross at weekly meetings.

Yul Brynner Defends Vietnam Orphan Lift

Boston (AP) Actor Yul Brynner defended massive airlifts of Vietnamese orphans as an act of "human brotherhood."

The father of two adopted Vietnamese orphans, Brynner said, "If a child... has been totally abandoned, then it is not immoral to consider yourself his human brother or father."

Brynner made the comments at Emerson College Tuesday following his receipt of the Joseph E. Connor Award for Achievement in Communications. The Academy Award winning actor is in Boston for the pre-Broadway tryout of the musical "Odyssey."

Justice Douglas Enters NYU Facility

(c) New York Times New York Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas entered New York University's Institute for Rehabilitative Medicine Tuesday for intensive therapy to help restore the use of his left arm and leg.

Douglas, 76, had joined his court colleagues Monday to hear 90 minutes of argument on capital punishment but returned to Walter Reed Army Medical Center overnight.

He suffered a stroke New Year's Eve.

A spokesman for the institute said Douglas would be there "at least two weeks."

Arthur Godfrey plans flight to Carbondale for banquet

Arthur Godfrey—the "old-red-head" of show business and radio fame—will fly into Carbondale to join members of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale's Sigma Chapter of Alpha Eta Rho international aviation fraternity at their annual banquet 7 p.m. Saturday in the SIU-C Student Center.

A 40-year veteran of all types of flying, with more than 16,000 hours recorded as solo or command pilot in airplanes ranging from his personal Beech Baron to DC-10 and Boeing 747 jetliners, Godfrey will be honored with the chapter's annual recognition award.

According to E.A. DaRosa, chairman of the aviation technologies division in the SIU-C School of Technical Careers (STC), Godfrey was instrumental in arranging a "substantial" 1968 gift of aircraft engines, fuel injection units and instructional mockups from Continental Air Cooled Engines Co. of the STC aviation technology program.

Godfrey is a long-time friend of DaRosa.

T. Richard Mager, SIU-C vice-president for development and services, himself an ardent aviation enthusiast, will act as master of ceremonies for the banquet, which will also be the 1975 annual meeting of Wings of Hope, a non-denominational aviation charity group which operates mainly in Central and South America and New Guinea. Its main mission is assisting medical missionaries in providing care in remote areas.

DaRosa serves as technical adviser to Wings of Hope, and several graduates of the STC aviation technologies program work as pilots and aircraft mechanics in the project.

In addition to recognizing

Godfrey for his aid to the STC aviation technologies program, a within-chapter award for the best active member will be made.

Other guests will include the officers and board of directors of Wings of Hope and the STC aviation technologies division advisory committee.

A dance will follow the banquet in Student Center ballrooms B, C and D.

Tickets for the banquet are $5.75 each. Further information and tickets are available by calling 536-3371.
