

Irving Lozier, 69, dies in Cheyenne

Irving Willard Lozier, 69, died at the Veterans Hospital in Cheyenne on March 23.

He was born to Roy and Eliza Lozier on November 9, 1913 at the couple's homestead near Moran.

Lozier grew up helping his father guide hunting parties, farm, and raise mink. He married Naomi Williams in Jackson on July 9, 1943.

He couple left the area in 1951 to work in Alaska. Ten years later, they moved back to the valley for a year, then moved again to Lander. Naomi resides there now.

Lozier is survived by his wife; sons Micky, Bob and Bill and one granddaughter, all residing in Lansing, Michigan; and a sister, Betty Vollan, of Lynnwood, Washington.

He was a carpenter by trade.

Earl Shipley, former resident, dies of cancer

Funeral services and burial were held March 23, 1983, in Uinta, Utah, for Earl Foote Shipley.

Shipley, 75, died of cancer.

For 20 years, until he retired in 1973, Shipley traveled to Jackson for The Restaurant Store and Equipment Company. He installed bar and kitchen equipment for businesses, including the RJ Bar, the Wort, Open Range, Pioneer, and Grand Teton Lodge Company.

He also worked as a desk clerk for two years at the Wort, when it reopened after the 1980 fire.

"He loved Jackson and the people. We hoped to come back and retire," his wife, Donna, said. She also worked for two years at the Wort and the Wrangler.

Shipley was reared and educated in Salt Lake City, and worked all his life in the hotel and restaurant industry. He was active in the LDS church and served a mission to Holland.

Survivors are his wife; three sons and two daughters, Dennis, Douglas, Thomas, Mrs. Mark (LoRee) Nisbet and Mrs. Joseph (Kathleen) Elmer; one stepson and two stepdaughters, Brent Linford, Patricia Wheat and Mrs. Glen (Sherry) Kunz of Green River; 14 grandchildren; five great-grandchildren; one brother and one sister.

Accepting the plane for 'Wings of Hope' is Mike Sullivan, left, of Boulder, Colorado. Sullivan just returned from two years of flying airplanes in New Guinea. Governor Ed Herschler, middle, provided two Big Wyoming decals for the plane's tail. B.T. McManus, right, donated the craft to the charitable organization.

McManus donates plane to 'Wings'

Part-time Jackson residents B.T. and Marie McManus have donated a $52,000 airplane to a charitable organization called "Wings of Hope."

The new Maule, single-engine plane will be added to "Wings" fleet of planes that fly in medical assistance and food to inaccessible regions of South America, Africa and Asia.

The plane has been dubbed the "Spirit of Wyoming" and is adorned with two Big Wyoming decals, compliments of Governor Ed Herschler. "This plane will be helping out needy people in South America for many years," McManus said. "And everywhere it goes, people will see those Wyoming emblems."

Wings of Hope was founded in 1964 by a group of St. Louis businessmen to relieve the needs of a tribe of famine-threatened nomads in a remote area of the Turkhana Desert in Kenya, East Africa.

The thought was to put a light plane into service; the businessmen would act as advisors. Long-distance pilot Max Conrad flew in the first "care packages", and the operation was so successful that requests came in for similar assistance around the world.

The group expanded and incorporated. It is nonpolitical, nonsectarian, nonprofit and staffed by volunteers, mainly aviation professionals.

Wings makes no attempt to retain ownership of the planes. Once it is satisfied that service will be maintained, a plane is given to the group it serves.

Over 30 planes have been distributed in the last 15 years.

The planes carry doctors, technicians and teachers to areas that lack communication. They also carry the sick and injured to hospitals and transport foods and medicines to areas struck by a natural catastrophe.

McManus has donated money to Wings of Hope for many years. He is the co-founder of the Bi-Rite drugstore chain in Wyoming, and will be honored this year by the Wyoming Pharmaceutical Association for 50 years of service.

Bi-Rite provided ambulance service in Wyoming before the state began its own air ambulance program.

Korinne Bagley named outstanding women by Ricks college and sorority

Korinne Bagley of Jackson has been named one of the three most outstanding women students at Ricks College for 1983. The school is located in Rexburg, Idaho.

Selection was made on the basis of scholarship, leadership, service, and student popularity.

Bagley is a member of the Sounds Show Choir, a performing and touring group composed of 16 young men and women. She is a vocal soloist and dancer for the group.

Bagley is also a member of the Lambda Delta Sigma sorority, of which she is president. Because of her outstanding contributions to the sorority, Bagley has been nominated for the Lambda Delta Sigma's "National Woman of the Year."

Bagley is listed in "Who's Who of American Junior College Students." She will graduate this April and continue her education at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, with a scholarship in music therapy.

She is the daughter of Jerry and Patsy Bagley of Jackson.

Basye collects two more 'gold stars'

Tom Basye has collected another pair of honors for his outstanding performance on the basketball court.

Basye was selected as the Casper Star-Tribune player of the year. The 6-2 senior was cited for his leadership, rebounding and shooting skills. Basye shot a sizzling 63 percent from the floor while averaging just over 18 points a game.

Basye was also named to the Wyoming High School All-Star Squad. The team will face the Montana all-stars in two games on June 10 and 11 in Sheridan and Billings.

Selections were based upon votes cast by coaches and sportswriters.

Basye has already been selected to the all-regional and all-state teams and was just recently named a football all-American.
