Baby Fae Called Inspiration At Service In City Of Birth

BARSTOW, Calif. (AP) - The only human baby to undergo a baboon transplant was eulogized Saturday as a "grain of wheat that has already brought much fruit."

About 25 people from the desert city where Baby Fae was born and a of media representatives 45-minute memorial service at St. Joseph's Catholic Church

The parents of Baby Fae did not attend the service. Baby Fae underwent the surgery Oct. 26 and died Nov. 15.

The chaplain who counseled and with Baby Fae's mother before the operation at Loma Linda University Medical Center was on hand to remember the infant who survived 20 days with the walnut-sized heart of a baboon.

The infant's struggle was an inspiration to young and old, Hinton said, relating the story of one woman who decided not to commit suicide because she was inspired by Baby Fae's struggle.

The Rev. Desmond Ditchfield. pastor of St. Joseph's, said Baby Fae's life "was as a grain of wheat that has already brought much fruit."

The child's godparents, Helena and Rick Attwood of Barstow, said the infant's short life had given them

"sunrises and hope." Meanwhile, more than a week after their daughter's death, Baby Fae's parents said that they believed they had done the right thing by allowing the experimental surgery and that they were still getting sympathy mail and donations.

"I never had any doubt that we had done the right thing," Teresa, the baby's mother, said in an interview in the current issue of People magazine. 'How can it be wrong to save a little

"Well, I'll tell you this - if there had been a human heart available and had the choice of that or a baboon heart. I would have chosen the heart that was most compatible with her, whatever it was," Teresa said. "There are a lot of sentimental ways of talking about the heart, but it's just a

People magazine, which is based in New York, bought exclusive rights to Baby Fae's story for an undisclosed sum. It said the parents, identified only by their first names, were unmarried and had separated before Baby Fae's birth.

But the father, Howard, said he had returned when he learned that their child had a fatally underdeveloped

"And so she introduces me to Fae, and says, 'You know, she's dyin',' " he recalled. "... Then I held her, and we had a few tears flowing there.'
